

Cape Breton photographer's show deemed 'fascinating'

Published on May 30, 2013

SYDNEY — Cape Breton photographer Stephen Tobin's first solo show in New York City, which will come to a close today, has received high praise from the director of the gallery where it was hosted.

Topics : Agora Gallery , Cape Breton , New York City , Sydney

"Stephen Tobin's first solo exhibition at Agora Gallery in New York City — The Natural Instincts of Nature — is by far one of the most fascinating photography exhibits that we have presented at our gallery," writes Angela Di Bello, director of Agora Gallery. "(Tobin's) ability to see the extraordinary among ordinary surroundings astounds and delights his growing audience."

Tobin, a native of St. John's, N.L., moved with his wife to Sydney about two years ago. The exhibit of his work opened in early May at the Agora Gallery, a contemporary fine art gallery dedicated to the promotion of national and international artists. Last year Tobin was added to the roster of artists they represent.